01 / THE STORY

Stories with teeth.

Ian Raymond writes outlaw country the way it was built to be written — as stories with teeth. Working solo with an acoustic guitar out of Flower Mound, Texas, he turns the ordinary and the outrageous into songs you can't shake.

His catalog runs wide. Tall tales built like campfire legends. The ache of a first truck and the freedom it bought. Songs that stare straight at the hard stuff: families pulled apart, and the quiet work of digging up what an earlier generation planted in you.

What ties it together is the storytelling. Every song has a beginning, a turn, and a reckoning.

“Three chords, the truth, and a story worth sitting still for.”

03 / THE SONGS

Son of a Gun

A devil, a madam & the gunfighter who buried his pistols for his boy.

“He was faster than the devil / she was hotter than the sun...”

That Old Dodge

First truck, first freedom — and passing it on down the line.

“Two kids on a bench seat in a rusted truck...”

Hoe a Row

What your folks plant in you, and the weeds you have to dig out.

“Your folks plant the seeds / some grow fruit and some grow weeds...”

Texas Tears

A family split apart under the flag that is supposed to protect it.

“It doesn't feel like freedom / if they can just take it all away...”
